Get Into the Study

Currently, I am sitting in a coffee shop where the drink of the month is an extra grande king cake latte topped with whip and cinnamon. In New Orleans, Mobile, and other places, the Mardi Gras season is wrapping up which means king cakes will be gone soon, too. Mardi Gras is the season just before Lent when cities host “carnival” with parades, celebrations, and lots of festivities. It is a time to celebrate with people you know and those you meet on a parade route and a time to throw caution to the wind. It’s a time “to let the good times roll!” One of the central themes of Mardi Gras is sharing time together over food such as red beans and rice and king cake. A king cake is a lot like a cinnamon roll, topped with icing, and sprinkles that are purple, green, and gold. It is a necessity for parties, parades, and places people gather during the season. But, if you aren’t from the area or don’t know about the culture, it’s a strange drink to see at the coffee shop.

For non-coffee drinkers, going in a coffee shop can be a bit intimidating, figuring out the sizes, the flavors, the types of specialty drinks, and all the extras can be overwhelming. Some people need a translator when they get to the counter (I know I used to!).

As you begin your group time, ask “Who is and who isn’t a coffee drinker?” This should start some conversation about types of coffee, brands of coffee, coffee vs. tea, etc. Then, ask “What has been your experience when it comes to ordering at a coffee shop? Did you have questions? Did you need a translator?” Let this conversation move your group to today’s discussion on salvation and the need for a mediator.

Live It Out

Use the following as you conclude this session.

On Tuesday, February 18th, President Trump granted clemency to eleven people. Since then, the power of presidential pardon has been at the forefront of many news stories. Presidential pardons have taken place since the first president, George Washington, and have often been a source of contention. A recent New York Times article highlighted several infamous pardons: James Madison granted clemency to pirates; Andrew Johnson pardoned the doctor who harbored John Wilkes Boothe after Lincoln's assassination; and Gerald R. Ford pardoned former president Richard M. Nixon.

Ask: "Why are presidential pardons often controversial?" Emphasize that pardons can upset people's sense of justice. Keep the focus on the concept of a pardon, not specific cases granted by President Trump or other recent presidents.

Ask: "What is the difference between a pardon and God's act of justification?" Discuss the positive effects of justification. Emphasize that Christ's saving act on the cross displayed God's righteousness and justice. In Christ, justice was satisfied. The penalty was paid in full. Use the commentary in the leader's guide under verses 24 and 25-26 for further clarification.

Direct the group members to the "Live It Out" statements. Encourage group members to choose one of the applications.
